Let's Start!

Time for the job interview ... Don't be nervous!

Learning Outcome

Describe common activities at work to a visitor using short sentences.

Ask your partner:

- Do you get nervous during interviews or formal conversations? Why or why not?
- What questions do people ask in interviews?

Can Do Statements

- I can talk about jobs and work.
- I can request and reply to requests for information.
- I can talk about what I have to do.

Let's Explore!

Sally talks to the restaurant manager. Does she have what it takes to become a sous-chef?

* When you "have what it takes", you are able to achieve your goals or objectives.

Instructions: Read the text aloud.

- Restaurant Manager: Hello! You must be Vanessa! I'm Michael.
- Vanessa: Nice to meet you. Here is my résumé. I also have 2 letters from my instructors.
- Restaurant Manager: Thanks. I need you to fill out this form for me.
- Vanessa: Certainly.
- Restaurant Manager: I see your grades are excellent. Your instructors are very happy with your work.
- Vanessa: Yes. Cooking is my passion. I need to get more work experience now.
- Restaurant Manager: You are in the right place! Do you have any questions about the job?
- Vanessa: What's the difference between a sous-chef and a line cook?
- Restaurant Manager: The line cook preps the ingredients. The sous-chef reports to the chef and plans the menus.
- Vanessa: That sounds exciting!
- Restaurant Manager: It is. You have to improvise sometimes. You also need to deal with pressure. Is your schedule flexible?
- Vanessa: Yes.
- Restaurant Manager: Perfect. I can let you know tomorrow.

Let's Practice!

Learning Points

Requesting and Replying to Requests for Information

When you need to ask a stranger for work information, you use expressions like Excuse me ... or Sorry ... to get their attention.

When you provide information to a stranger about your place of work, you can reply with an offer of help like How can I help you?

Requesting Information	Providing Information
I need you to fill out this form for me. Is your schedule flexible? Do you have any questions about the job?	Certainly. Cooking is my passion. Yes ... You need to deal with pressure. The sous-chef reports to the chef.

The verb "need" is used when making a request. We use the pattern "need someone to do something".

Examples:

- Manager: I need you to fill out this form for me.
- Ann: Certainly.
- I need you to help me to cook this food.
